These selected paragraphs distill the contents and give you a quick look inside All-Hallow Eve; or, The Test of Futurity.: Look inside the book: With this view-a distant one, he still hoped-before him, and knowing that he had already sown a good crop, and reaped a sufficient harvest to live liberally, die peacefully, and be berrid dacently, he had set a great portion of his land upon a lease during his own life, at the termination of which it was to revert to his son-in-law, of whose existence, long before that time, he could have no doubt, and for whose name a blank had been left in his will, to be filled up in due time before he died, or, failing that event-not his death, but a son-in-law-it was left solely to his daughter Winifred. ...Indeed, he was inclined to think that the same matter might have originated in Neds own mind, from some words he had once or twice dropped about poor Winnys prospects when he was gone, and the suspense it would be to him if she were not settled in life before that day; snaffled perhaps by some good-for-nothing, extravagant fortune-hunter, with a handsome face, when she had no one to look after her.
