

Dont Cut What Can Be Untied: A Parents Primer in Helping Their Child Succeed in School

The lives of many children and adolescents in our schools are much more complicated than most non-school adults imagine. Students experience depression, anger, frustration, and anxiety in response to family, peer, and school related stresses. Often, they live with the emotional pain in silence, feeling that no one understands and no one can help. Sometimes they hurt alone. As your child's first teacher you have taught him/her about things that heal the earth's fears, things that are helpful, things that are beautiful. With a comforting clasp of your child's hand, you teach him/her to love while others hate. All of these are your free gifts of priceless luxury that stimulate the dawning wonder on your child's face. The world, however, is incredible to those children who stare and do not comprehend it because they have no teacher. Dont Cut What Can Be Untied is meant to share insights that will assist you in your job of parenting. It describes the roles of professional staff who have specialized training and are willing to help your child's teacher, you, and your child be successful in school. This book also has a comprehensive litany of articles that you will find helpful in honing your parental/teaching skills.
