

Godmaker: Vampires of London

In this erotic m/m graphic novel, a young, attractive, and highly successful London artist is tempted by a seductive vampire with an offer to surrender mortality for a chance at disease-free immortality, heightened senses, and eternal love. Although vampirism can manipulate a physical body into lasting centuries, can any love ever be counted upon to be as equally and truly eternal? After all, the vampire in question has loved before, made the very same proposal to another potential mate, and had the offer accepted, only to have become horribly disappointed and frustrated by the outcome. If he's taken more time, this time around, and been far more careful in making his selection, can even all of his careful planning really guarantee him the success he's after? Or will seducer and seduced end up getting far less and far more than either ever bargained for?
