

The House of Seven Mabels (Jane Jeffry Mysteries, No. 13)

Harried suburban single mom and delightfully incorrigible busybody Jane Jeffry returns to do some dangerous housecleaning in another charming whodunit from Americas Agatha Award-winning answer to Dame Agatha Christie: Jill Churchill. Homemaking is about to take on a whole new meaning for Jane Jeffry now that shes agreed to help restore and redecorate a decrepit old neighborhood mansion. The homes owner, the prosperously divorced Bitsy Burnside, considers herself to be a feminist to the max and wants an almost all-female crew to do the dirty work -- prompting the quick-witted Shelley Nowack to dub the project the House of Seven Mabels. With her best friend and decorating whiz Shelley on the estrogen-heavy team, Jane thinks this exhausting, plaster-dusty job may not be as unpleasant as it initially appeared to be. Until, of course, things start to get very messy. It begins with a series of mean-spirited pranks -- strange odors, mysterious electrical shorts, a myriad of petty annoyances designed to impede the progress of the fixer-uppers. And then the pranks turn deadly, leaving one of the workers lying lifeless at the foot of a staircase. Tragic, yes, but an accident? Jane thinks not. And with the able assistance of Shelley, not to mention a little help from her best beau, Chicago detective Mel VanDyne, Janes hoping she can construct a solid case and nail the assassin. Suspects are certainly in abundant supply. The surviving members of Bitsys building brigade all had the opportunity. Joe Budley -- the contractor originally hired, then fired when Bitsy had her no men allowed epiphany -- had a motive. But the more Jane saws away at the truth, the more complicated the criminal blueprint appears. And she may be painting herself into a comer, leaving no exit if a crafty killer decides to make Jane Jeffry the next demolition project.
